

Double Luck (2017)

By Walt Wright

There is a myth that long ago Cowboys decided old horseshoes brought them luck and began hanging them on the side of their barns and eventually in their homes. There was one key factor to hanging the horseshoes and that was to put the open end at the top. Apparently this kept the luck from falling out.

This small 6x6 acrylic painting features two old rusty horseshoes overlapped with the open ends pointing upward, therefore providing a double portion of luck.

