

ECLIPSE (2015)

By Walt Wright

Upon completion of a smaller painting titled "Corona" which depicted a crimson macaw flying in front of the sun creating a corona of the sun's rays, I felt a larger image would have had more impact. Since I had already decided in my mind to also do a blue macaw, I placed it crossing a full moon on an 18x24 canvas. The larger size gave the image the dynamic impact I was seeking. Obviously this painting quickly draws attention to itself.

A late warm evening in a tropical region can be exhilarating and refreshing. Exploring the coastal night life has thrills to which the sunny days on the beach can't compare. When moving along a boardwalk with the night breeze going through your hair; the time calls for some fresh seafood and a cold beverage. Oysters and shrimp have always been among my favorite foods. Now you'll need to select a beverage to accent that seafood. Perhaps you should choose something that this painting brings to mind. Enjoy the close of a perfect day and enjoy the Eclipse.
