

South Holston Lake MM#1 (2015)

By Walt Wright

Fresh water lakes have a certain magic about them that simply takes your breath away. The open water, the wild life, a clear view of the sky, and the wind in your face are just a few examples of a lake's compelling attraction. South Holston Lake which starts in Virginia and travels to the dam located in Tennessee is surrounded by majestic mountains. This lake has a beauty unlike any other. The water is full of fish and the sky and banks are full of birds. The great herons are just one species of crane that call this lake home during the summer months. Many other species of birds can be found here as well, including sea gulls, kingfishers, red tail hawks, loons, ducks, Canada geese and my favorite the American bald eagle.

This sectional acrylic painting consist of three 10x8 panels. The view of this painted series is taken near mile marker one looking away from the dam toward Virginia.
