

The Sword In The Stone (2015)

By Walt Wright

The story of the Sword in the Stone has often been confused with King Arthur and the sword named Excalibur. However it is a separate story entirely. After a mythical kingdom was overthrown by an evil ruler the good king was killed. The man that ruled was not the rightful heir to the throne. A wizard embedded a magical singing sword into a stone and said that someday the true king would come and pull the sword loose. With it he would restore the kingdom to a state of peace and prosperity for the people. The sword was made for a king but it was extracted by a small boy. This boy grew up to become the king, for he was the son of the good king, whom the wizard had hidden away. The moral of the story is that some things are not as they appear and there is always hope.

This painting was donated to The Arts Depot of Abingdon, Virginia. Its sale helps to keep the lights on and art alive in Abingdon. Thank you for supporting the arts!

